

Its very distinctive markings made it an easy target for hunters.

A sudden decrease in rainfall, possibly caused by climate change, spelled extinction for this species.

Gorilla-sized species that died out in Madagascar about 400 years ago.

Huge flightless bird that was wiped out by hunting.

This flightless bird became extinct within only 100 years of humans and their domestic animals arriving on the island of Mauritius.

Probably wiped out by cats and foxes.

Extinction was partly due to the introduction of cats, which hunted them.

Thought extinct, recovered,
then declared extinct
again in 1994.

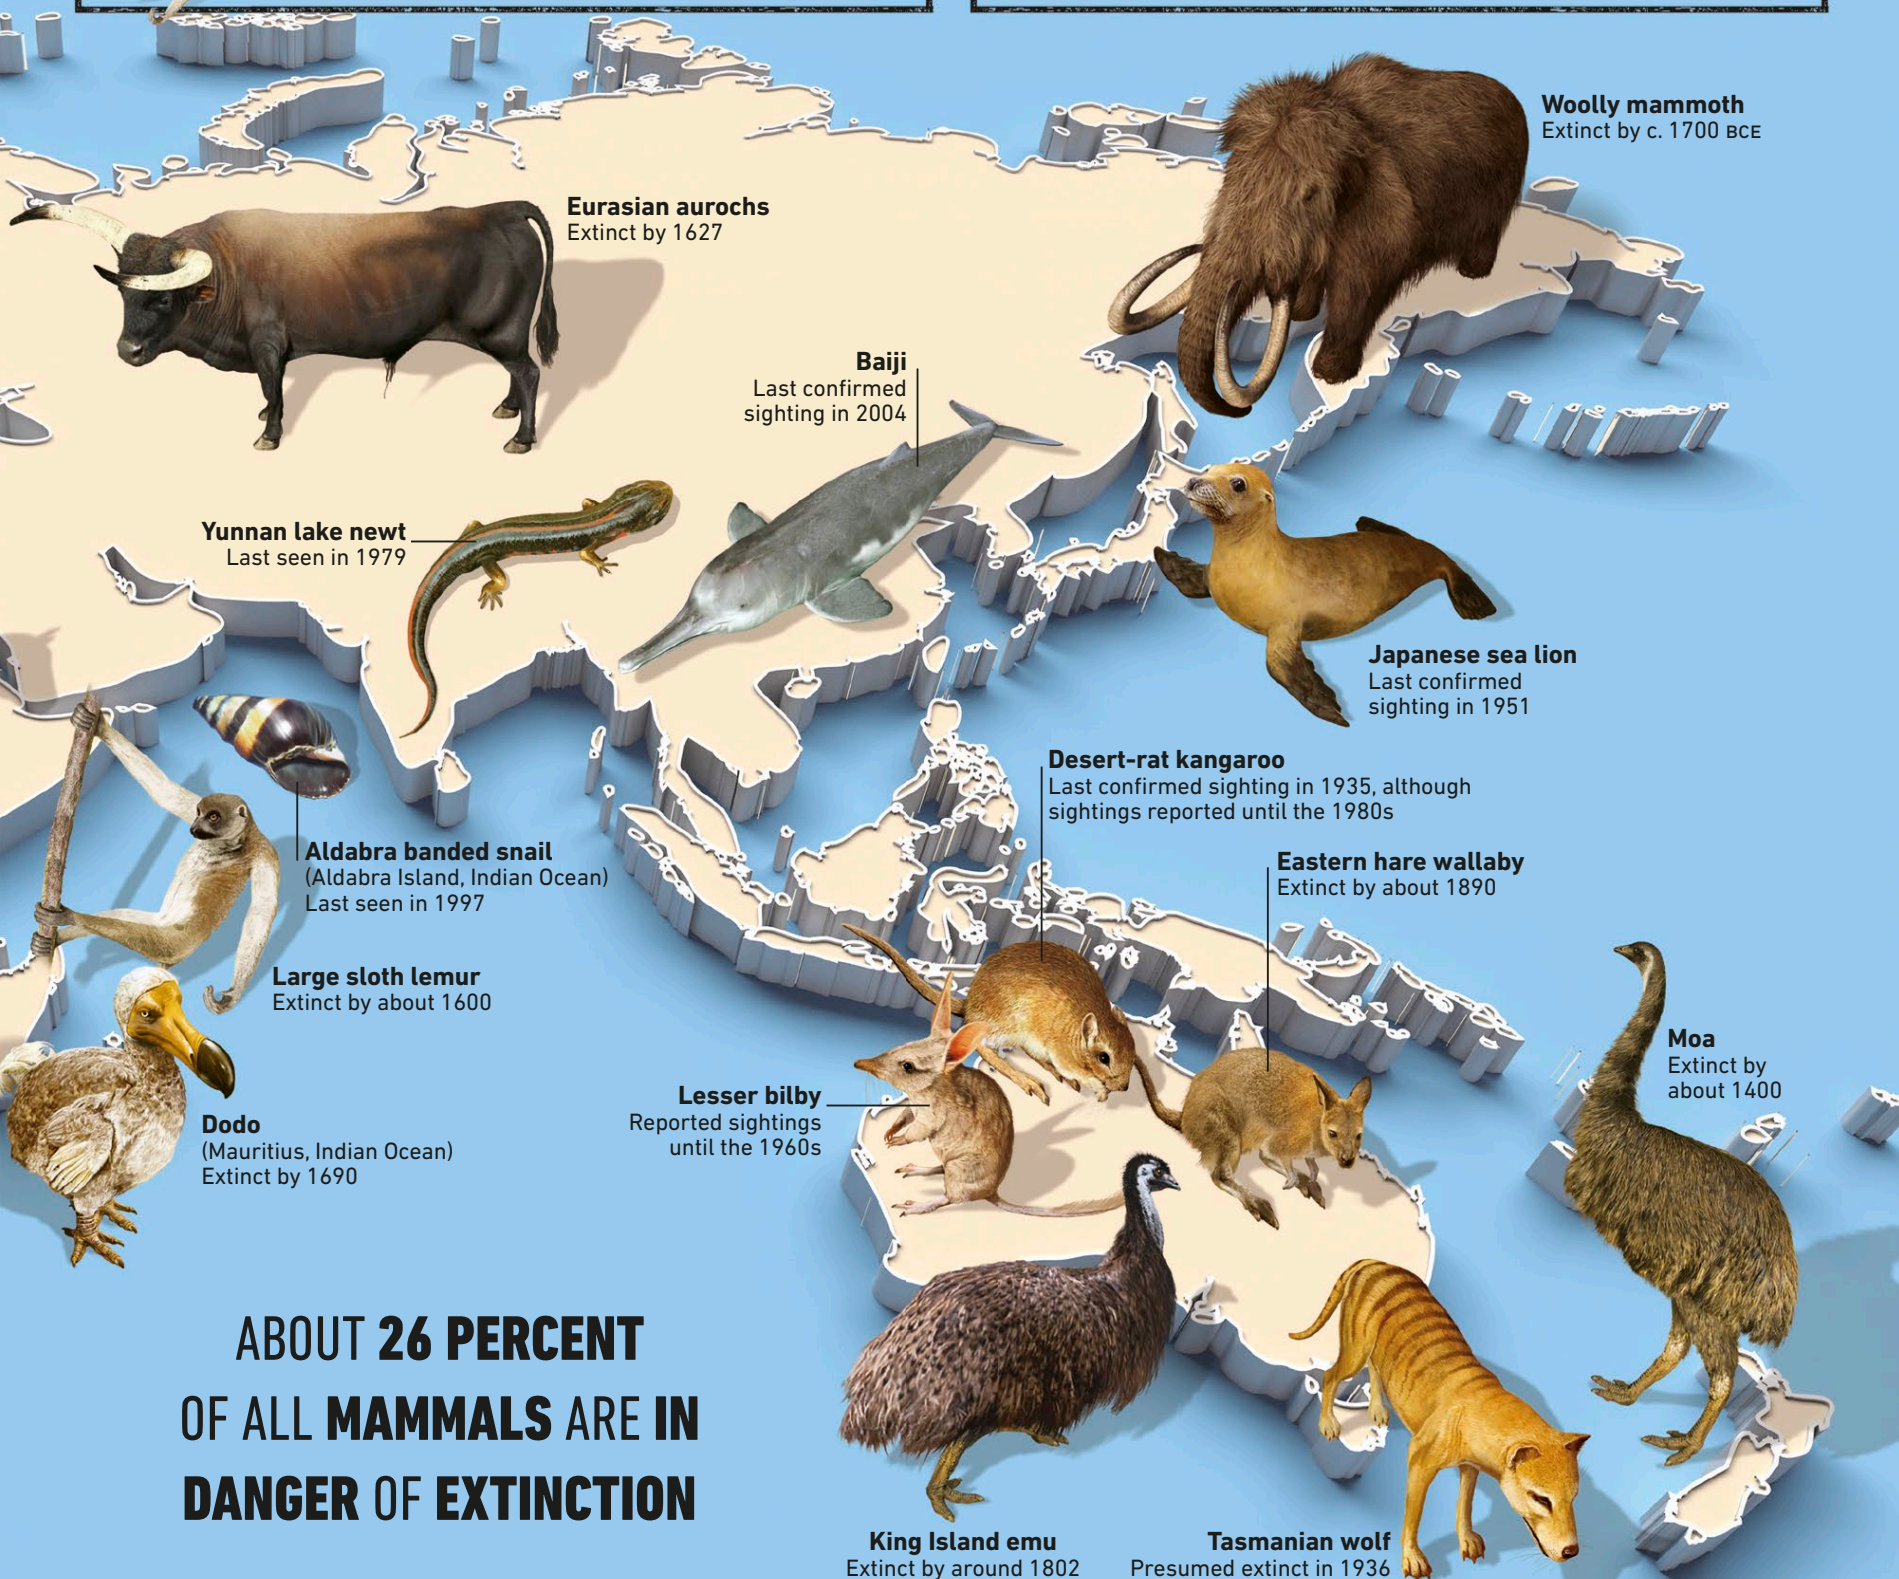

Wiped out by sealers
and their hunting dogs.

Hunted and trapped
by human settlers in Tasmania—its last hiding place.

Victims of overhunting
and loss of habitat.

ABOUT 26 PERCENT OF ALL MAMMALS ARE IN DANGER OF EXTINCTION

TIMES FASTER THAN THE NATURAL EXTINCTION RATE.