Straddling the country's Northeast and Southeast regions, Delaware is a cultural blend of North and South. It's also home to lots of animals and plant life that thrive in its rich soil, wet marshes, and coastal inlets. In addition, it has a special place in American history as the first US state.

The First State

On December 7, 1787, Delaware became the first state to ratify (approve) the US Constitution—a document that set forth the laws of the newly formed country. This made Delaware the very first state in the US. Today, Delawarians celebrate the event on Delaware Day—December 7.

The state animal of Delaware is the gray fox.
