

West Virginia

The whole of West Virginia is nestled within the Appalachian Mountains, giving it the nickname "The Mountain State." This wild land is home to some awesome animals, including bears and bats. There are plenty of landmarks to see, such as roaring waterfalls and amazing bridges.

The mountain caves of West Virginia are home to big-eared bats.

Mountains in Monongahela National Forest

West Virginia wildlife

Rugged mountains and quiet forests make West Virginia the perfect home for lots of wildlife, such as flying squirrels, deer, and wild turkeys. The state mammal, the black bear, also lives in the peaceful wilderness. Despite their name, black bears can also be gray, brown, and white!

