

In 1921, Boyer, a 20-year-old restaurant waitress, proved fearless when on her second flight in an aircraft, she stepped out of her seat and onto the wing. Later that year, she teamed up with former World War I pilot Billy Brock. The pair performed 352 shows across North America throughout the 1920s, dazzling crowds with their exploits. Boyer would stand on the wing of the aircraft as it performed a loop-the-loop, or dangle from the wing hanging by one hand, or even by a cord she gripped with her teeth! She also mastered jumping from a speeding car to a plane—a stunt she pulled on 143 occasions before bans on low flying came into place in 1929. Miraculously, Boyer lived to the grand age of 88.
