

Crossing the gap

As the Matushevich Glacier flows toward the coast of East Antarctica, it passes through a narrow gap between hills, causing cracks, or crevasses, to form in the ice. After traversing the gap, the glacier ice floats out onto the sea.