

The wombat is the only animal in the world that produces cube-shaped poo.

Wombat

A wombat looks like it could be half-bear and half-rabbit. However, this unusual Australian mammal is actually a relative of kangaroos and koalas. It is very furry, very podgy, and very good at digging. The sturdy wombat's body is perfectly built for fast tunnelling, with muscular legs and strong claws. If it senses danger, it will run to its burrow and use its tough behind to block the entrance so hungry predators can't get at it.

Mother wombats keep their baby safe in a pouch on their stomach. Unlike their kangaroo cousins, the wombat's pouch faces its rear. This is so it doesn't fill up with earth when the wombat is digging!
