

Some weather balloons can reach heights of more than 32 miles (52 km).

TRACKING STORMS

Weather balloons can measure wind speeds and collect information about other atmospheric conditions. This data can provide early warnings of severe weather conditions, such as this tornado in Oklahoma.

The balloon is usually filled with helium or hydrogen, both of which are lighter than air.

