

Adding nutrients

Scientists from the John Innes Centre, UK, have created genetically modified purple tomatoes by adding a new gene from the snapdragon flower to a regular tomato. This increased the anthocyanin in the tomatoes, a chemical thought to have a wide range of health benefits and which could even reduce the likelihood of getting certain diseases, such as cancer.