

Curling

In curling, teams slide big stones along a slippery sheet of ice and try to get them to stop on a target called the house. The closer they get to the middle of the house, the better.

Players can use their stones to knock the other team's stones away from the target to keep them from scoring.

At the Olympics

Curling was first played at the Winter Olympics in Nagano, Japan, in 1998.

Canada has been the most successful nation, winning three golds in the men's event and two golds in the women's event.
