

“It is a sacred creature, for our new village,” said Mei.

“It made a sound like thunder when it came out—let’s call it Dragon,” Chen said. (Dragon sounds like the Chinese word for thunder.)

Liu led her friends into a dance of joy behind the dragon. The dragon led them all the way to the village by the sea. The villagers stopped fighting to look at the magnificent creatures, and they had a great feast to celebrate the end of the fighting.

Throughout the banquet the dragon entertained them all, flying high up to loop the loop around stars in the night sky, then diving deep into the sea through the hoop of the moon’s reflection.

Together, the villagers from all the villages stood shoulder to shoulder, staring in wonder at their sacred dragon.
