

Firedrake

Firedrake has been used as a term to describe all fire-breathing dragons, but it is also the name of one of the rarest dragons. Often mistaken for a shooting star, the Firedrake can fly at extraordinary speeds, shooting between stars in a flash of flame.

APPEARANCE

It is hard to know exactly what form Firedrakes take beneath their fiery shield. But it is thought that they have large wings for their size and can make their bodies very aerodynamic.

DWELLING

Nobody is sure, but their preference to be high in the atmosphere suggests they rest in the mountains on the rare occasions that they land on Earth.
