

We have made rivers, mountains, animals, as well as trees and plants to feed them, and air and weather to keep them alive. Now the world can not stay up—it is weighed down by all our wonderful creations.”

“How can I help you?” Aido-Hwedo asked the God of All Creation.

“I am your friend, I will do whatever I can to help you.”

“It is a big thing to ask of you,” replied Mawu-Lisa. “You must coil up with your tail in your mouth, and climb inside the Earth to hold it up. And once inside you must never stop turning.”

Such was his love for the God of All Creation, that Aido-Hwedo climbed inside the Earth to keep it turning for all eternity.

Mawu-Lisa worried about the burden the great serpent must endure, and pledged to help him however possible. And so, the God of All Creation created the seas to cool his body when the ceaseless turning made him hot, and made sure the Earth was full of iron to keep him strong, and precious stones to keep him healthy.

To this day, Aido-Hwedo remains in the Earth, and the Earth continues to turn.

Legend says that earthquakes and tsunamis are a result of Aido-Hwedo taking a break and stretching his enormous body.
