

Mountain dragons build their nests in crags on the side of mountains, and line them with moss and feathers.

Meadow dragon eggs are so tiny, they can be laid in foxgloves and snapdragon flowers.

Dragon eggs

Just like different types of dragon can have wildly different appearances and characteristics, the same is true of their eggs.

Celestial dragons don't build nests. They lay their eggs on the nearest planet or star when their eggs are ready to hatch.

Water dragon nests are most commonly built in coral clusters and are woven with seaweed.