

Look out for my flowers

Once I've reached maturity and around 3¼ft (1m) tall, my tube-shaped flowers should start to appear every year, opening to white edges and a golden throat with a green-and-white stamen tongue. In Brazil, I get pollinated by bats and sphinx moths, but in your home, I will be visited by the occasional fly.

I will keep you calm

Blue is associated with calmness and serenity, so my subtle shade will evoke soothing emotions. Since I like full sun, I get bluer the brighter it is, and my coloring deepens as I get older.

I'm easy to care for

I can tolerate hot windowsills and survive periods of neglect—in fact, watering me too much can make my stems squishy and yellow. I am great for beginners and could set you on the road to collecting many glorious varieties of different shapes and sizes.
