

MADAGASCAR JASMINE

Stephanotis floribunda

I remember the first time I caught a whiff of the Madagascar jasmine's delightful scent—it made me smile and still does whenever I see one. It's a beautiful indoor climber, with glossy green leaves and delicate star-shaped flowers, often sold growing around a hoop as a living wreath.

“My heavenly fragrance will lift your mood.”

Help me thrive

POSITION

Grows well in good, indirect light, shaded from the hot sun. Needs temperatures of at least 63°F (17°C) in summer and 55°F (13°C) in winter.

POTTING

Repot into the next size up when roots grow through the bottom of the pot or begin to circle inside it. Use a well-draining compost.

GROWTH RATE

This is a slow-growing climbing plant that, in a 8in (20cm) pot, will reach heights of 3¼–6½ft (1–2m) and a spread of 1½ft (50cm).

CARE

Water regularly and feed every 2–3 weeks in the growing season. Reduce watering in winter but keep the air moist by misting through the year.

My scent will relax you

My sweet-scented blooms will fill a room with fragrance, which can have a positive impact on your mood, helping reduce stress, aid sleep, enhance physical and cognitive performance—and bring joy!

Get to know me

My horticultural name comes from the Greek stephanos, meaning “crown,” and otos, meaning “ear,” referring to the shape of my flowers and the pistils in my flowers, which look a little bit like ears. One of my common names is “bridal wreath,” as my pristine white blooms are incredibly popular for wedding bouquets.
