

I'm sensitive

Please don't squeeze my quill since I store water there. If you squeeze me, I will quite literally cry, as tears will appear on the flat of my quill. I'm also sensitive to chemicals, so rainwater or distilled water is better for me than tap water.

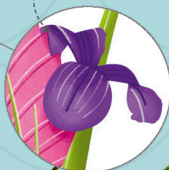

Look out for my flowers

My vibrant quill may be as showy as a bunch of flowers, but it will last a lot longer, as it's actually densely packed bracts, or modified leaves, that can live for up to three months.

My real flowers are dainty purple blooms that appear from the side of my quill and are short-lived, sticking around for only a few days.

My violet flowers emerge briefly from between my bracts

Help me feel at home

I am an epiphyte, which means that in my natural rain forest habitat, I grow attached to trees, getting my moisture and nutrients from the humid air. This is why, when I'm kept as a houseplant, I will feel right at home if you mist me regularly as well as water my soil.
