

Help me feel at home

I'm native to Mexico and Costa Rica, so I can bring the tropics into your home—and because I'm an air plant, you can get creative with how you display me. Just tuck me in to a crevice in some wood, nestle me in a seashell, or attach me to a wire rack for a contemporary wall piece.

Look out for my flowers

When I'm mature, I will produce exotic colorful flowers—usually in pink and purple. My blooms should appear annually from my small spray of thin spiky leaves and can either be tiny, surprisingly large, or long and tubular, like a bursting firework.

Give me a soak

Water me well by plunging me into room-temperature water for about an hour once a week, then remove me and hold me upside down to ensure any excess water drips off. Alternatively, if I am mounted on a support, you can mist me two or three times a week until the excess water begins to drip off. It's best to use rainwater.
