

WANDERING JEW PLANT

Tradescantia zebrina

Good looking, versatile, and tolerant of neglect, the Wandering Jew plant is both mood-enhancing and a breeze to look after. With its pendulous trailing foliage, showing off the stunning variegation and purple and silver coloration, it makes an incredibly striking hanging-basket plant.

“My beautiful trailing foliage will dazzle you.”

Help me thrive

POSITION

Loves full sun but will take some shade so can be placed in a south-, east- or west-facing room. Keep in a minimum temperature of 63°F (17°C).

POTTING

Repot small plants yearly in spring into the next pot size up, using an all-purpose potting mix. Larger plants benefit from a weekly feed instead.

GROWTH RATE

This is a vigorous, trailing grower—its stems can reach 1½ft (50cm) long. Pinch tips off growing stems regularly to keep plants bushy.

CARE

Water to keep moist in summer. In winter, let the soil dry out first. Will tolerate feeding with every other watering or even once or twice a year.

I'll live n up your room

I make an impressive feature when displayed in a hanging container, lifting the eye and livening up a dull corner. My shiny silver coloring mixed with green and purple tones will also lift your mood by softening hard corners and adding warmth to your room.

Let's make babies

You can propagate me easily by taking a 3in (8cm) long cutting, removing the lower leaves so they aren't buried in the soil, and then repotting the stem in a standard houseplant potting mix. Water it, and in about two or three weeks, it will root.
