

Enjoy my “flame”

I get the name “flaming sword” from my long bract blade, which is a brilliant red, orange, or yellow color and hosts my small tubular green-yellow flowers. My fiery-colored bract can last for weeks.

My true flowers are small, yellow, and short-lived

My leaves add character

My foliage is just as striking as my flowers. The green and dark-purple tiger stripes of my splayed leaves make me ideal for a chic interior display. Look out for any brown patches appearing on them, as this may mean they are getting too much sun.

Help me feel at home

In my native South America, I use my roots to anchor myself to trees and rocks and get nutrients from my central cup instead. This is why you need to water me by filling this cup with rain or distilled water—to replicate my natural home!
