

MOOD-ENHANCING PLANT COLORS

Studies have shown that color is a powerful stimulant that influences our emotions, with bright, saturated hues eliciting the strongest responses and paler tones having a calming effect. Plants showcase a rainbow of nature's colors, which can soothe, excite, or simply brighten our day.

Anthurium andraeanum, pp.42–43

Red

Although it is used in warning signs to alert us to danger, red is also a warm, energetic color that can stimulate excitement and passion—hence, why it's seen as an incredibly romantic color. Vibrant, bold, and intense, this highly saturated primary color makes a big statement and can really stir the emotions. A red houseplant is sure to ignite your senses.

Green

Humans can see more shades of green than any other color, and when we think of it, we think of forests, woodland, and grass, which calms and refreshes us. Linked to good luck, safety, and health, green is a color that helps us feel grounded and at one with nature, so bringing some greenery into your home is always a good idea.

The zingy green of this sword fern will refresh your space

Nephrolepis exaltata, pp.110–111