

ZEBRA PLANT

Calathea zebrina

This tropical beauty from the rain forests of Brazil is sure to engage both your mind and your senses, with its broad, lime-and-emerald striped leaves that also possess tactile qualities and a sensitivity to the circadian rhythms of day and night.

“My fascinating foliage also purifies your air.”

Help me thrive

POSITION

Keep in a warm place, above 60°F (15°C), and away from drafts. Likes high humidity and a bright position but not direct sunlight.

POTTING

Repot every year or two, preferably in late spring, using a loam-based or loam-free compost, since they don't like being pot-bound.

GROWTH RATE

This plant can grow quite tall relatively quickly, reaching about 3ft (1m), and it will gradually bush out to 2ft (60cm) or more.

CARE

Loves moisture, so water frequently to keep the soil moist, leaving it drier in the winter. Feed monthly during the growing season.

I'll clean your air

The large surface area of my leaves makes me a great air purifier, removing carbon dioxide from the air and releasing oxygen. And because my leaves also look so striking, I am highly popular with interior designers.

Be mindful of me

I do not like rapid changes in temperature, so keep me away from drafts, especially in winter, and also heat sources such as fires and radiators, which will both rapidly change the temperature and also dry the air in the room.
