

Touch me

My zebra-striped leaves have a velvety feel to them because I have small hairs that cover my waxy leaves. I am a very tactile plant to engage with, and I can bring some height to your room as my oval leaves grow on top of long stalks.

Get to know me

I am known as a “living plant” because I close my leaves at night and reopen them in the morning. I have a small joint between my leaf and stem that enables light to move my stem, and as my leaves curl I can also make a soft rustling sound.

Help me feel at home

I get homesick for Brazil sometimes, so please place me on a tray of wet pebbles to keep the air around me moist, or give me some tropical rain occasionally by standing me in the shower under some lukewarm water—this will refresh me, water me, and wash my leaves.
