

Look out for my flowers

Another of my names is the “flowering jade plant” because in suitable conditions I can produce white star-shaped flowers in winter. They complement my glossy leaves perfectly and will also provide a gentle aroma. But don’t expect me to flower every year!

Let’s make babies

If one of my leaves or branches breaks off, you can make a baby plant from it. Just cut the end cleanly and sit the base in water and watch it root. Once my babies have rooted, pot them up in a well-drained succulent mix.

Get to know me

I have a similar appearance to a bonsai tree, as my habit means I grow like a miniature tree with a thick, sturdy trunk and branches. However, I am a succulent, meaning I store water in my foliage, so I am considerably easier to keep than my bonsai friends.

BE AWARE: I can be harmful if eaten, so keep me away from young children and pets
