

Get to know me

As a bromeliad, I am an epiphyte, which means I get my nutrients from the air and the rain. So I have a funnel-shaped urn formed by the center cluster of my foliage. In my natural habitat, this is where I collect rainwater to drink. In Brazil, my urn is believed to catch all of the “blessings from above.”

I will brighten your day

My star-shaped bracts will add intriguing structure to your interior, and my vibrant colors—I’m available in a huge variety, such as red, orange, purple, green, pink, white, or even bicolored—will energize you.

Look out for my true flowers

My brightly colored bracts may be my main attraction, but I do also produce true flowers. They are small and white and bloom in between my bracts, and when they appear, this signifies the approaching end of my life, which will take about a year.
