

MEXICAN HAT PLANT

Kalanchoe daigremontiana

This amazing plant has large, fleshy leaves, grows quickly, and is easy to keep. It is known as “mother of thousands”—and you can see why, as it produces hundreds of baby plants around its leaf edge. Grow these on to share the love and connect with friends and family.

“I am one plant that will give birth to many.”

Help me thrive

POSITION

A sunny windowsill is ideal for this plant. It can even spend the summer outside, but make sure it's gradually introduced outdoors.

POTTING

Repot into the next size up when the roots outgrow the container, using a loam-based compost with added grit.

GROWTH RATE

These plants are fast growing and can ultimately reach a height of 3¼ft (1m) and a width of 1ft (30cm).

CARE

Water when the soil starts to dry out in summer and feed monthly with a balanced liquid fertilizer. Reduce watering to a minimum in winter.

Help me feel at home

I am native to Madagascar, so I am used to growing in rocky and dry places. That's why it's best to pot me up using a cactus potting mix. Alternatively, you can try adding sand to an all-purpose mix to help drainage.

Let's make babies

I live for only around two years, but I keep going by producing more baby plants than you can handle. Plantlets will keep falling off me, so fill pots or a seed tray with cactus compost and lightly touch the soil with the base of a plantlet—it will soon take.
