

I'm out of this world

I was sent into space to Salyut 6, the Soviet space station, in 1979 to boost the mood and morale of the crew. Originally sent for research purposes, plants like me were soon found to help calm the cosmonauts on board and alleviate loneliness and depression.

My leaves are amazing

I rarely bloom when kept indoors—it's my water-storing succulent leaves that I'm known for. Their edges are fascinating—they look almost like a spinal cord with lots of segments, which explains my other common name: "devil's backbone."

I like a vacation

Although I'm a happy houseplant, I'd quite like to be outside for the summer. Gradually introduce me to the outdoors by first letting me sit in a little morning sun, then place me in bright, indirect light. Bring me back inside before temperatures drop below 39°F (4°C).

BE AWARE: I am harmful if eaten, so keep me away from young children and pets.
