

Stand your volcano somewhere warm, so the paint dries quickly.

8 Paint the cone dark brown, but leave an unpainted strip at the bottom. If you don't have brown paint, mix together red, green, and blue. If you can get it, add a little sand for a gritty texture.

9 Paint the bottom of the cone and the cardboard base in shades of green to represent the grass or jungle below. If you like, paint the top of the cone red, to look like fiery lava.

10 Here comes the really messy bit! Pour the ingredients shown below into the volcano's opening. Once you have added them all, mix them with a spoon.

Pour in about 2 tablespoons of dishwashing liquid.

Pour in about 2 tablespoons of warm water.

Pour in about 3 tablespoons of vinegar.

Finally, add a few drops of red food coloring.

11 Get your camera out if you have one because your volcano is about to explode! Add two or three teaspoons of baking soda into the volcano's cone and wait for a few seconds.

The mixture bubbles up to the top of the cone.

A foamy liquid spills over and pours down the slopes, just like real lava in a volcanic eruption.
