

AROUND THE HOME

It's amazing what experiments you can carry out with everyday items like paper, rubber bands, and balloons. As you'll see in this exciting chapter, you don't need any special materials to understand the structure of DNA or to find out about the planets in our solar system. There are also experiments with paper planes and static electricity. You'll find most of your equipment somewhere at home—perhaps on your desk or even in the trash can!