

Inuit hunter carrying a kayak

Inuit

The Inuit, the people of the icy Arctic, lived by catching fish and hunting seals, whales, and walrus. The Inuit chased these animals in light sealskin boats called kayaks.

Homes

People in different areas had different kinds of homes. This photograph, taken in 1876, shows a Paiute village in the Great Basin area. These huts, made from sticks, are called wickiups.

Indigenous people of North America

Before Europeans settled in North America, it was home to hundreds of groups of indigenous (native) people. North America can be divided into ten different regions, called cultural areas. In each area, people shared similar ways of life. In some places, they farmed, while in others they lived by hunting.

