

World fairs

Imperial countries held big international exhibitions. These allowed each country to show off its great empire, along with its peoples and products, to the rest of the world.

Exposition Universelle, Paris, 1900

The imperial world

By 1900, most of the world was controlled by a few European nations. The part of the world ruled by each nation was called its empire. Europeans called the foreign countries they ruled their colonies.

