

They kept the baby hidden until he was three months old. By then he was sleeping less and it was harder to keep him a secret.

So his mother wove a basket out of reeds and Miriam helped.

They coated the basket with mud and tar and let it dry. It was like a tiny boat.

The baby's mother put him in his little basket-boat and carried him to the river. She put the basket gently in the water, where it was half-hidden by bulrushes and reeds.