

All this time, Miriam had been hiding in the reeds, watching out for her baby brother. “Your Highness,” she said. “I know an Israelite woman who will nurse the baby for you.”

“Good,” said the Princess. “The baby must have milk.”

The baby was looked after by his own mother until he was old enough to go to the palace and live with Pharaoh’s family.

The Princess called the baby Moses, which means “taken from the water.”
