

The Baby Moses

Joseph died in Egypt. His people, the Hebrews, grew in numbers there. The new king did not remember Joseph. He made the Hebrews his slaves. As their number multiplied, the king felt threatened. “Kill all their baby boys,” he ordered.

One mother made a plan to save her baby.
She made a basket out of river reeds and rushes.
Then she put her baby inside and let it float like a tiny boat, hidden in the tall papyrus.

Her daughter Miriam kept watch.

Soon the king’s daughter came down to the river to bathe.

She found the baby and took him back to the palace.

She named him Moses and raised him as her son.

