

An illustration depicting the biblical story of Samson's final act. Samson, a muscular man with long dark hair, is shown from the waist up, pushing against two large, cracked stone pillars. He wears a white loincloth and black wristbands. His expression is one of intense effort. In the background, other figures are visible, including a man in a blue and white striped shirt and a woman. The scene is set within a temple with large stone pillars and a yellowish-orange background. Debris is scattered around, suggesting a recent collapse.

But Samson's hair
was growing.

He pushed against the temple pillars with all his might, and the roof came crashing down on his enemies.

"... and after your son is born, you must never cut his hair, because from the day of birth he will be dedicated to God as a Nazirite."

JUDGES 13