

On the menu

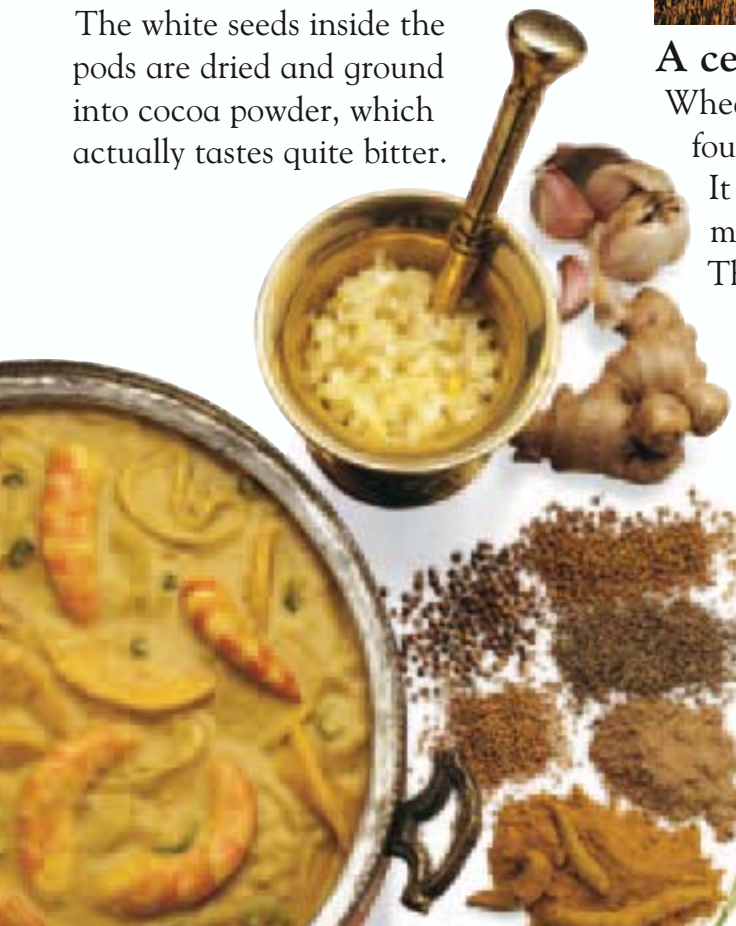

All life on Earth depends on plants. Even those animals that just eat meat, eat other animals who feed on plants. People have been growing plants for food for thousands of years.

Sweet seeds

Chocolate is made from the seeds of a cocoa tree.

The white seeds inside the pods are dried and ground into cocoa powder, which actually tastes quite bitter.

A cereal success story

Wheat is the world's most widely-grown plant, found on every continent except Antarctica. It is a type of grass called a cereal, which means it has seeds that can be made into flour. This group also includes oats, maize, and rice.

Herbs and spices

A herb is any plant with a non-woody stem, but what cooks call herbs are leaves or flowers of certain, safe-to-eat plants.

Spices, such as pepper, are made from ground seeds or bark.