

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

Florist's chrysanthemums, as well as those that are grown as hardy garden plants, are grouped according to their flower forms, approximate flowering season (early, mid-, or late fall), and habit. The best groups for garden decoration are the sprays, pompons, and semi-pompons, the hardy Korean, and early, reflexed chrysanthemums. The dwarf Charm-types, forming dense, domed masses of flowers, are most attractive displayed in pots for both indoor and outdoor use in fall. Most of the various flower forms are described below, with further details in the Plant Dictionary under Chrysanthemum.

Incurved—fully double, dense, spherical flowers have incurved petals arising from the base of the flower and closing tightly over the crown.

Single—flowers each have about 5 rows of flat petals, borne at right angles to the stem, that may incurve or reflex at the tips; the prominent, central disc is golden throughout or has a small, green centre.

Fully reflexed—fully double flowers have curved, pointed petals reflexing outward and downward from the crown, back to touch the stem.

Pompon—fully double, dense, spherical, or occasionally hemispherical, flowers, have tubular petals with flat, rounded tips, growing outwards from the crown.

Reflexed—fully double flowers are similar to those of fully reflexed forms, except that the petals are less strongly reflexed and form an umbrella-like or spiky outline.

Spoon-shaped—flowers are similar to those of single forms, except that the ray petals are tubular and each opens out at the tip to form a spoon shape.

Intermediate—fully double, roughly spherical flowers have loosely incurving petals, which may close at the crown or reflex for the bottom half of each flower.

Spider-form—double flower heads with long, thin ray-florets; the outer ray-florets are more or less pendent, the inner ones curling upward.

Anemone-centered—single flowers each have a central, dome-shaped disk, up to half the diameter of the bloom, and up to 5 rows of flat, or occasionally spoon-type, ray petals at right angles to the stem.

Quill-shaped—double flower heads with tubular ray-florets that have slanting openings at the tips, like quills.

C. 'Innocence' ① [Rubellum Group; single]

C. 'Pennine Oriel' ① [Florist's; anemone-centered]

C. 'Nell Gwynn' ① [Korean Group; single]

C. 'Purleigh White' ① [Florist's; semi-pompon]

C. 'Emperor of China' ① [Rubellum Group; double]

C. 'Enbee Wedding' ① [Florist's spray, single]

C. CHESAPEAKE ① [Florist's spray; spider-form, quill]

C. 'Spartan Seagull' ① [Korean Group; single]

C. 'Aunt Millicent' ① [Korean Group; single]