

ALSTROEMERIAS

Commonly known as the Peruvian lily, lily of the Incas, or parrot lily, these South American tuberous perennials are prized for their delicate, funnel-shaped blooms in yellow, orange, pink, red, white, or purple, with decorative markings in contrasting colors. They also have an exceptionally long flowering season—from midsummer to the first frosts—and make excellent cut flowers. Most suppliers offer plants, rather than tubers, which are best planted in spring after the late frosts in a sunny site and free-draining soil, giving the roots time to establish before winter. Although reasonably hardy, young plants are vulnerable to cold, wet conditions—protect them in winter with a thick mulch of well-rotted compost or manure.

A. PRINCESS JULIETA ('Zaprijul') ①

A. PRINCESS ARIANE ('Zapriari') ①

A. 'Apollo' ①

A. 'Blushing Bride' ①

A. 'Friendship' ①

A. aurea 'Orange King' ①

A. INCA ICE ('Koice') ①

A. 'Moulin Rouge' ①

A. 'Red Beauty' ①

A. 'Elvira' ①

A. 'Tara' ①

A. INCA TROPIC ('Kotrop') ①