

The time it takes for our solar system to orbit the Milky Way once is known as a galactic year. It is approximately 230 million years.

We are here!

It takes light 100,000 years to pass from one edge of the Milky Way to the other.