

What's in your suitcase?

Just like you pack to go on holiday, astronauts pack lots of things to take into space. They wear different clothes depending on what they are doing.

Launch Entry Suit

Ready to go

During launch and re-entry, astronauts wear a special bright-orange suit, called a Launch Entry Suit, or “pumpkin suit”. Tools are stored in huge pockets on the legs.

A peek underneath

For a spacewalk, astronauts need to wear an extravehicular mobility unit, or EMU. Underneath this, astronauts wear space underwear, a one-piece suit with small, water-carrying tubes that help keep them cool.

Under the helmet, there's a communications cap, called a “Snoopy” cap, that has a headphone and microphone.
