

New neighbor

Red foxes used to live in the woods, but many have moved into cities. They roam the streets at night, searching for fruit and mice or garbage cans to raid!

A fox's tail is called a brush.

A gray wolf's thick coat can be any color, from white to black!

Bushy tail

Dogs are marathon runners, not sprinters. A wolf can only run 28 miles (45 kilometers) per hour—much slower than a lion.

Ankle

Dogs walk on their toes.

The claws stay out all the time.

Cleaning up

The African dogs called jackals love leftover lion food—lions hardly ever finish their dinners! Meat eaters that do not kill their own food are called scavengers.

Win by a nose

When you smell a flower, you can often tell what sort of flower it is without opening your eyes. Dogs can do even better than this—they can smell who touched the flower the day before!

Dog "talk"

Every dog has to know its place in the pack—they can't all be the leader! Dogs can't talk, so they use body language instead to let one another know whether they make or take orders.

Dogs wag their tails when they are happy.

The pack leader holds its tail upright and snarls.

This Indian wild dog, called a dhole, does not want to fight, so it rolls on its back.
