

Pawprints

Unlike cats and dogs, bears have flat feet. Their heels touch the ground when they walk.

A special pad on a panda's paw is used as a sort of thumb—useful for grabbing bamboo shoots.

This big brown bear is more than twice the size of a tiger!

All bears have small, round ears.

A bear's face always looks the same—you can't tell whether it is angry or happy!

Save the giant panda!

There are less than 2,000 giant pandas left. It is not going to be easy to save them—females are only fertile for three days a year. They also need to eat 30 pounds (14 kilograms) of one special type of bamboo a day.

Grizzly bears are a type of brown bear. They are called grizzly bears because the tips of their brown hairs are gray, or grizzled.

With their big, strong arms, bears can hug a person to death!

Grizzly bears stand up to 10 feet (3 meters) tall. They live in Canada and the US.

The front paws can be used as clubs to hit other large animals.
