

PEOPLE IN THE PAST

The lives of men and women who lived a long time ago were very different from ours. The first people made their homes in caves and had to kill their food or find it growing wild. For a long time, no one could read or write, so information and stories had to be learned by heart so they could be passed on.

Changes in the way people lived came gradually, when travelers—traders, or soldiers who went to war in foreign lands—took new ways of doing things, new foods, or new materials from one place to another. Sometimes, changes were particularly important, like the invention of the wheel or the printing press. These changes tended to spread quickly, and completely altered everyday life.

Viking warrior

18th-century gold doubloons

Ancient
Peruvian pot

Pottery beaker
c.2200 BCE