

ORCHESTRAS

Many musicians play music in groups called orchestras. Most orchestras have four sections: string, percussion, woodwind, and brass. The different sounds and notes, from as many as 120 instruments in a symphony orchestra, combine to form wonderful music. Orchestras usually play classical music, often written by great composers of the past, such as Mozart and Beethoven.

Percussion players play many different instruments, such as drums, triangles, and gongs.

Set the beat

Most of the instruments in a gamelan orchestra from Indonesia are percussion instruments. They also have bamboo flutes and plucked string instruments.

Violin

Cymbal

Principal violinist

Clarinet

Woodwind instruments, including recorders, are played by blowing down a tube that has holes in it.

The leader of an orchestra is always a violin player who sits near the conductor.