

Canada

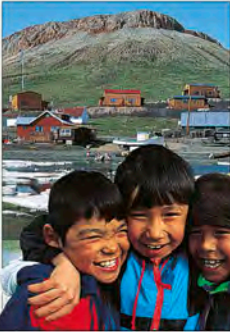

Is there anybody out there?

The first long-distance phone call was made in Canada in 1876. A century later, Canada was the first country to set up a satellite network. Satellites provide a vital link to many remote communities.

Winter sports

Winters are very harsh all over Canada. Ice hockey and skating are national sports—some families flood their back gardens in winter, so that the water freezes to make a temporary ice rink.

Inuit victory

Indigenous people have lived in Canada's Arctic north for thousands of years. In 1993, the Inuit people regained control of native land when a territory called Nunavut was formed and put under their control. Nunavut covers more than 20 percent of Canada's land mass and is home to almost 40,000 people.

Two languages

Canada has two official languages, English and French. The first Europeans to settle in Canada were the French, followed by the British. Today, the majority of Canadians speak English, but French is the official language in Quebec, Canada's largest province.

A tug pulls the timber down the river. Water transportation is used when there are no major roads through the forest.

The timber is taken to a riverside sawmill, where it is cut into planks or pulped for papermaking.
