

Land of wine

France produces some of the world's best wines. Each region has its own wines, with their own special flavors. In the Rhône valley in southeast France, grapes ripen in the summer sun. They are then harvested and fermented in vats.

Small but rich

Luxembourg is a tiny country nestled between France, Belgium, and Germany. Its small population has a high standard of living, because of the country's success as a financial center.

Fabulous food

The French love their food, and take care to buy it as fresh as possible. Most French people are careful shoppers, closely inspecting food and even sampling it before they buy.

Attractive vegetable displays are arranged to catch the shopper's eye.

Many French shops sell only one kind of produce, but offer a wide range of choices.

Crusty French bread is bought every morning, as it does not keep fresh for long.
