

Folk art in Taiwan

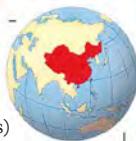

Taiwan has some colorful folk traditions. A sticky mixture of rice and flour is dyed and molded to make these decorative figures. In the past, the flour and rice recipe was used to make children's snacks. Today, the figures are kept, not eaten.

China

Taiwan

Hong Kong

More than seven million people live in the 403 square miles (1,045 square kilometers) of Hong Kong, making it the world's most crowded place as well as a busy trading center.

Get well soon

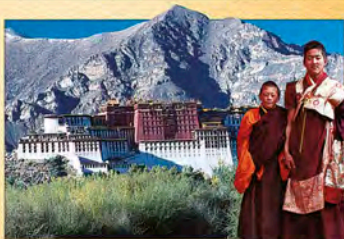

This street trader is selling herbal medicines. Ancient, natural ways of treating illnesses are very common in China.

Angelica root

Most Chinese mothers work full-time. Their children are looked after in day care at the workplace, until they are old enough to go to school.

Buddhist Tibet

Most people living in Tibet are Buddhists. They believe their past leaders are alive now in the body of their present leader, the Dalai Lama. In 1959, the Dalai Lama fled his home, the Potala Palace, to escape the invading Chinese army. He now lives in exile in India.

