

Colombia

River of colors

The river Caño Cristales in central Colombia is famous for the rare water plants that grow there. For a few months a year, these turn a spectacular bright red!

Changua

A soup made from eggs and milk called changua is a popular breakfast in the Andes region of the country.

Cotton-top tamarin

Native to the forests of northwestern Colombia, this small monkey takes its name from the fluffy white fur on its head.

Local fruit sellers

For generations, brightly dressed fruit sellers known as palenqueras have marketed their produce in the city of Cartagena. They carry fruit in big bowls balanced on their heads.

Museum of Gold

The indigenous Muisca people of Colombia crafted fine figures and jewelry out of gold. The Museum of Gold in the city of Bogotá has more than 55,000 exhibits dating back hundreds of years.

National sport

This modern monument depicts Chaquén, the Muisca god of sports, playing the traditional throwing game of tejo.

The Andes Mountains and two rivers, the Cauca and the Magdalena, pass through Colombia. Among this country's major products are coffee, bananas, emeralds, and coal.

- 📏 439,735 sq miles (1,138,910 sq km)
- 👤 49.1 million
- ★ Bogotá
- 🗣️ Spanish, other languages (+3)