

Africa

Central African Republic

River fishing

The Ubangi River provides a plentiful source of food. Men use long nets to trap the fish while women take the catch to market.

Fabulous feathers

These black crowned cranes are found in the wetlands of the country's north, including in Manovo-Gounda St. Floris Park, south of Birao.

- 240,535 sq miles (622,984 sq km)
- 6 million
- Bangui
- Sangho, Bandha, Gbaya, French

Central African Republic is in the heart of Africa. The country is crisscrossed with rivers, which are used to transport goods and people. In the northern savanna lies the Manovo-Gounda St. Floris park, home to elephants, cheetahs, and the rare black rhinoceros.

Congo

Unique sport

Nzango is a high-energy sport combining gymnastics with dance, in which two teams compete. It evolved from a playground game.

Endangered antelope

The bongo is a large African antelope with a bright, striped coat and long horns. The destruction of its forest habitat means very few remain in the wild.

- 132,047 sq miles (342,000 sq km)
- 5.3 million
- Brazzaville
- Kongo, Teke, Lingala, French

About two-thirds of this central African country is covered in dense rain forest. Most people live in towns and cities by rivers. The capital, Brazzaville, is just across the Congo River from Kinshasa, capital of neighboring Democratic Republic of the Congo.