

Africa

Burundi

Three stars represent the main ethnic groups of Burundi: Hutu, Tutsi, and Twa.

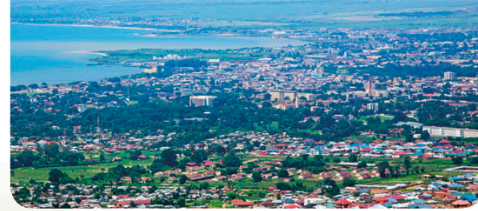

Rugege Highlands forest chameleon

This recently identified species of chameleon is unique to the dense forests of the Rugege Highlands in the northwest of the country.

- 10,745 sq miles (27,830 sq km)
- 11.9 million
- Gitega
- Kirundi, French, Kiswaile

The small nation of Burundi borders Lake Tanganyika, a deep rift lake. The new capital, Gitega, is also the cultural center of the nation. Coffee and cotton are among the country's main products.

The drums are made from hollow tree trunks and animal hides.

Commercial capital

A bustling port on Lake Tanganyika, Bujumbura ships the country's produce to surrounding nations.

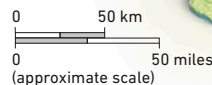

Sacred drums

Karyenda drums are sacred instruments in Burundi. Emblems of the country's historic kings, they are played at ceremonies such as weddings and funerals.

King's Palace

This beehive-shaped, thatched building is a reconstruction of the Rwandan king's traditional residence in Nyanza near Nyabisindu, where the royal court settled in 1899.

- 10,169 sq miles (26,338 sq km)
- 12.7 million
- Kigali
- Kinyarwanda, French, Kiswaile, English

Rwanda's hilly terrain includes the volcanic Virunga Mountains. Lush rain forests carpet the slopes, the habitat of many primate species, including chimpanzees, golden monkeys, and rare mountain gorillas.

Rwanda

The sun represents the enlightenment of Rwanda's people.

Kigali extends over several hills and valleys.

Powerful women

Women in Rwanda hold more power than women in any other country in the world, with 62 percent of seats in the parliament. In 2020, the nation ranked sixth in the world for overall equality between women and men.

Women working in coffee bean collectives share in the profits of the group.

