

Australasia

Australia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, and thousands of small islands make up the Australasia region. From deserts, mountains, and rain forests to beaches and coral reefs, the habitats here are home to many animals only found in this part of the world.

Australian coast

The western Australian coast is home to hundreds of fish, mammals, and bird species. Australian pelicans often land here to enjoy the sand and sun after staying in the air for 24 hours!

Christmas Island
(AUSTRALIA)

Ashmore and
Cartier Islands
(AUSTRALIA)

Cocos
(Keeling) Islands
(AUSTRALIA)

Australian outback

The hot, dry center of Australia is known as the outback, or the "bush." Because it is mostly desert, very few people live here, but some amazing animals have found ways to survive the tough desert conditions.

Snares Islands

This New Zealand island group, north of the Auckland Islands, is protected from humans so native animal species can thrive. One is the Snares penguin, which nests only on these islands—on the ground, under trees and shrubs.

Macquarie Island
(AUSTRALIA)

